

Coach's Copy Kit

Welcome!
I'm so glad you're here.

The Coach's Copy Kit was designed with YOU in mind.

Most of my done-for-you clients over the years have been female coaches and I saw a real need to help with messaging and copywriting specifically for you that was different than what all my bro-marketer counterparts are teaching. I love 'em, don't get me wrong, but we women do business differently. We speak differently. And our clients think and buy differently.

AND, I created a special video masterclass training series to help you take your copywriting skills to the next level. Each video is 10 minutes or less and meant to be easy to consume and implement quickly!

BONUS #2: #1 Copywriting hack

The best, simplest, and FREE way to improve your copy is to HAND write good copy. Use resources like swiped.co or the chapter in Hypnotic Writing discussing this concept and hand write it at least three times minimum. Do it frequently. You'll start to notice that your brain will soon start to think like a good copywriter without even having to "try."

Here's an amazing example to start improving today:

How To Write Copy So Compelling Your Prospects Can't Pull it Down

By Parris A. Lampropoulos

Want to write great copy? Then think "salted peanuts."

Imagine you're at a party and there's a whole dish of those salted peanuts sitting within reach. You reach over and have one. Then ... a few seconds later ... you have another. And another. Before you know it, the peanuts are gone and you're salivating for more.

Well, that's how I feel every time I read one of Joe Sugarman's ads. They're so addictive you can't stop reading.

For those of you who aren't familiar with Joe, he's the president of Blublocker Corp., and one of the greatest copywriters alive. He has sold hundreds of millions of dollars of product through his catalogues, space ads, and TV infomercials.

So when Joe Sugarman talks, you listen. I listened at a seminar a number of years ago, and what I heard changed forever the way I approach my ads and sales letters.

At the seminar, Joe stepped up to the lectern and told us he was about to let us in on THE secret of his success as a copywriter.

BONUS #2: #1 Copywriting hack

Sugarman's Secret

Turning on the projector, he flashed one of his famous ads on the overhead screen and pointed out the various components. These included the Headline ... Subhead ... Illustration ... Captions ... Crossheads ... and Layout.

Then he told us the secret: "All of these elements are designed to get you to do one thing and one thing only. They're all designed to get you to read the first sentence. That's all."

He went on to say that the purpose of the first sentence is to get the reader to read the second sentence. And the purpose of the second sentence is to get him to read the third. And so on.

The deeper the reader gets into the copy, the greater the chance he'll buy the product. So your job as a copywriter is to make the reader glide effortlessly through the ad.

Or, as mail-order king Ben Suarez puts it: a good ad is like a "greased chute, with no dead spots in the copy. Once the prospect starts reading, he or she flies through the promotion and can't stop."

So how do you make your ad like a greased chute? Start out by having a great opening sentence, one that grabs the reader by the throat and makes him want to know more.

A Valuable Lesson

If you want to learn how to write sentences like that, just take a lesson from Reader's Digest, the most widely read magazine in the world. Here are some examples of opening sentences I found in a recent issue:

BONUS #2: #1 Copywriting hack

“Carl Burnside was in his kitchen when he heard his 8-year old daughter, Julia, scream.”

“As often as not, a President’s political problems begin with himself.”

Notice how those sentences arouse your curiosity and practically force you to read further. Your opening sentences should do the same.

So think of your opening as a funnel leading into the giant chute that is your ad. Then, once you’ve gotten the reader into the chute, keep it greased so the reader continues to slide through effortlessly.

Use Transitions

The way to keep the chute greased is by making smooth transitions between sentences. You do that by arranging your sentences in a logical order and by having each successive sentence pick up where the last one left off.

To understand the above concept, read the following 2 versions of the same statement:

Version 1: “The best ads are those that are written quickly. The enthusiasm for the product comes through when the ad is written quickly.”

Version 2: “The best ads are those that are written quickly. When ads are written quickly, the enthusiasm for the product comes through.”

Notice how Version 2 of the statement is easier to read than Version 1. The reason? The first sentence ends by leaving the thought “ads that are written quickly” in the reader’s mind and the second sentence begins with that same thought.

BONUS #2: #1 Copywriting hack

So pay attention to transition. Arrange your thoughts logically. Repeat key words from sentence to sentence. And if you can't find any better way to link your ideas, use old stand-bys like "in addition," "by the way," and "up to this point."

Up to this point, we've discussed openings and transitions, but there are also other factors you should know about. Here are some additional guidelines:

1. Write with passion! Passion is absolutely essential -- without it, your copy will be lifeless. So before you sit down to write an ad, get yourself into a peak emotional state. Let all your enthusiasm for the product come out in the copy. Write from the heart. And don't be afraid of overdoing it or of sounding corny or hokey. As long as you're being honest and genuine, people will be moved by your enthusiasm and will respond by opening their wallets.

2. Write from the reader's point of view. The reader doesn't care about you or your product. All he cares about is what's in it for him. So tell him. And tell him in the second person, present tense. Don't say "a person will look and feel younger;" say "you look and feel younger."

3. Use active voice, not passive voice. Passive voice is wimpy and robs your copy of vitality. So don't say "a vote was taken by the committee;" say "the committee took a vote." Don't say "when your order is received;" say "when I receive your order."

4. Speak in actions, not abstractions. Rather than using abstract concepts such as "you'll have better health," show your prospect what having better health means. Draw a picture for him. Otherwise, he'll have to go through the mental process of translating your abstraction into the proper image. And by the time he does that, you've lost him.

BONUS #2: #1 Copywriting hack

5. Use simple sentences and simple words. Don't say "procure," say "get." Don't say "numerous," say "many." Don't say "sufficient," say "enough."

6. Use short sentences and short paragraphs. Long paragraphs are hard to read ... and long sentences leave the reader out of breath. Try to limit your paragraphs to under 7 sentences and your sentences to under 17 words.

7. Avoid superfluous words. Instead of saying "a great number of people," say "many people." Instead of saying "we're concerned with the issue of safety," say "we're concerned about safety."

Strip every sentence down to its cleanest components. Get rid of every word that serves no purpose, every long word that could be a short word, every unnecessary adjective or adverb. Boil down your copy as a chef boils down a soup stock or cream sauce. What you'll end up with is copy so concentrated and so tasty that few good prospects will be able to resist it.
